TALK BY THE HOME MARKET CLUB.

There is an aspect of the present demand for free trade which seems to have been too generally overlooked by those voters inclined to lend their voices and ballots to its promotion. This is a studied persistent effort to prejudice the public mind against the very idea of protection. Not only is the policy an monopoly understood subjected to misrepresentation, but the word itself is held up to derision. Protection is frequently used as synonymous with extortion, and in many instances protective legislation is denounced as robbery. The result of this must be that when, if ever protection to manufacturers is broken down, its assailants, if consistent, will next attack some other of the several forms of protection.

The exclusive right extended by patent laws to the inventor who has devised the machinery for manufacturing is a more radical protection than is accorded by any schedule of existing tariff laws.

The inventor is absolutely shielded from competition during the life of his patent, and even beyond that period provision is made for its existence. This protection is not even confined to American citizens, but is extended to aliens as well.

The writer of a book, the composer of a song, the proprietor of a trade mark, the designer of a picture, are accorded a monopoly of use and sale in which they are protected by all the power of law enforced by the machinery of the federal courts. Not only is protection thus extended to the inventor, designer and author, but to whomsoever he may choose to invest with his prerogative: the protection is transferable, and can be made a matter of merchandise. These are forms of protection that no advocate of "unfettered trade" was consistently supported.

There is another aspect of protection which appeals directly to a large and influential class of our citizens. Scarce a village in the country permits a peddler or other itinerant trader to prosecute business within its limits without first paying for such such privilege. Any other policy would be injustice to resident tradesmen whose property is taxed for the support of municipal government.

The free trader, who demands that foreigners shall be permitted to bring their wares into the markets of the United States without tariff, will be forced to claim for his fellow countrymen the privilege to sell without tax wherever he can find customers.

The theocrats, who now so loudly inveigh against what they term the privileged classes, and so roundly denounce the policy of protection, will be forced by the inevitable logic of consistency to attack the existing protection to inventors, authors, designers and eventually all municipal regulations imposing taxes for privileges of trade. With them consistency now waits on expediency, in the hope of finding present allies among the future victims of their unpatriotic policy.

No sooner will they have secured the surrender of one tenth of the protective policy under which our country has made its phenomenal progress, than their attacks may be looked for at some other point.

To stop short of this will be to incur the ignominy of demanding in the interest of foreign privileges of trade who are willing to accord to their own fellow citizens.

The only safe course is to overwhelm the plotters and their un-American schemes with such a majority as will demonstrate the futility of further efforts in behalf of free foreign trade, and the train of evils certain to follow in its wake.

DEMOCRATS BADLY SCARED.

The New York Herald, which is supporting Cleveland with all its might, has come to the wise conclusion that the democratic campaign can't be fought and won except by hard fighting, and adds:

"And, as Wellington said of Waterloo, it must be hard pounding from the beginning to the end."

This remark was called out by the following:

Democratic Chairman Barron is, as we judge by our disputes with Rochester, talking a fair amount of nonsense in the western part of the state. "We have," he says, "the republicans on the run." "The prohibition movement is growing fast and gets its recruits from the republican party." "There is no doubt that the result will be a glorious victory for democracy."

The answer which the Herald makes to this sort of nonsense, shows that it looks upon the present campaign with a good many misgivings so far as democratic success is concerned.

It denies that the republicans are on the run, and says: "Mr. Barbour cannot be lieve this nonsense or that Mr. Cleveland is to be elected by such drift. The republicans are not on the run. They begin with an aggressive campaign, and they are forcing the fighting in every northern state. Wherever we look we see them perfecting their organization.

In congress they have drawn party lines with unscrupulous rigidity and assail the administration at every point. They are raising money, forming clubs, sending out delegations, and striving by all means to win. There is no more "run" in the republican ranks than there was in Lee's ranks when Grant crossed the Rapidan.

Like Lee, they mean to fight, and can only be whipped by the hardest kind of fighting."

On another point the Herald says: "It is nonsense to expect to elect Cleveland by temperance prohibition votes. When it comes to close quarters these temperance votes cannot be counted on—assuredly not against Harrison, who has been presiding temperance and running Sunday schools and bible classes in a Presbyterian church for a generation. The republican leaders understood this when they nominated him."

When a newspaper like the New York Herald, which has fought for every democratic candidate for the presidency since 1848, talks in that fashion, there is danger ahead for the democracy, and well may the Herald sound the note of alarm.

There is a sentiment in the air that the republicans will win. The north is tired of Cleveland. It is tired of the threats of the democracy to destroy protection. It is tired of the belittling of the southern democratic and their arrogant domination in the government. This is why there will be a solid north to match the solid south.

The "hope in the air" for republicans, is well illustrated by the Herald:

"While the republican campaign shows animation, the democratic cause droops and hangs. Instead of clear, resounding words of right and command, we have drift like this from Mr. Barbour:

"Mr. Cleveland can win, but he is not to win by the leaders of the democracy
